

BARBARA MARTINI

Barbara Martini, PhD, is a professor of applied economics at the University of Rome Tor Vergata, and Associate researcher at the Research Centre for Macroeconomic and Regional Forecasting, Bucharest University of Economic Studies, also serving as the delegate of the rector for equal opportunities and inclusion. She is member of the Gender Committee of the Italian Society of Economics.

Her primary research interests encompass gender, gender in regional science, resilience, and spatial econometrics. Dr. Martini teaches Statistical Methods in Economics, Economic of Innovation and Gender & Inclusion, along with courses such as International Economics (3563) and Macroeconomic Principles (1101) Microeconomics Principles (1102) at Temple University Rome Campus. She also teaches Spatial Econometrics in the Economics Ph.D. program at Sapienza University.

With a cum laude bachelor's degree in economics from the University of Rome Tor Vergata, Dr. Martini spent a year at Groningen University, focusing on Advanced Econometrics and Operational Research. She holds a PhD in Economics from Tor Vergata University and is an active member of AISRe, Ersu, and Sie. She is the author of numerous publications in referred journals at national and international level.